The term 'Soul food' was first used widely in the 60s to describe all food from the Southern States. Its origins however stretch back generations to the early slave trade and a West African mainly plant based diet. Soul Food is about community, eating together with friends & family and it also draws from the native American diet of locally sourced vegetables and crops. It was the staple of poor plantation workers of the South before being developed into the comfort food we know today. Our menu has its home in these roots but is 100% meat free and often vegan too – marked VG on the menu
