OUR STORY

Born out of the golden age of rail in 1873 as The Midland Grand, when London was the biggest and wealthiest city in the world and its railway stations temples to industrial might. The architectural feat of Victorian Gothic splendour is still celebrated and revered today as the St Pancras Renaissance Hotel.

Known as the 'Cathedral of Railways' St Pancras is intrinsically linked to a time of romance and exploration. From Canada to Calcutta goods came by boat and by rail to fulfil the growing needs of this great metropolis.

Thanks to William Gladstone's Single Bottle Act of 1861, for the first time ordinary people could buy wine by the bottle. We owe much to this great era, where most of the drinks we enjoy today were born through innovation and experimentation.

Just as the shape and architecture of our cities was shaped by Victorian tastes, so were our drinks.

CHAMPAGNE

“LES ANNÉES FOLLES”

Originally Champagne's biggest market was the Tsarist court in Russia who enjoyed a sweeter style. By mid 19th Century, the British had become Champagne's biggest customers and they asked for a drier style – Brut Champagne was the result, which has since become the standard.

In the spirit of celebration, a selection of our favourite Champagnes.

GIN

The Victorians made gins that you'd want to drink, rather than to make you forget. They created the modern taste of a dry spirit flavoured with juniper, orange peel, cardamom, liquorice, coriander etc. These 'botanicals' came from all over the world to London where they were steeped in alcohol and then sent back out to fortify homesick empire-builders.

VODKA

Vodka, or something very much like vodka, has been produced all over Eastern Europe since the Middle Ages but it was in the Victorian era that it became a consistent quality product. The growth of the Russian Empire first under the Tsars and then under the Soviets spread it all over Eastern Europe and Central Asia. It is now the world's most popular spirit.

RUM

Rum is perhaps the ultimate Empire drink. Created as a by-product of refining sugar and given to sailors in the Royal Navy, it was originally rough stuff. It was then aged and refined by distillers in Barbados and Jamaica into a smooth rich drink that can be enjoyed neat.
